

Brexit means resist

As time passes, it is becoming more and more clear that Tory Brexit would be a disaster for ordinary people. But it is not inevitable. Opinion polls show that most of the public now want to remain in the EU, and even a majority of Leave voters believe Brexit is going badly. Democracy means that people must have the right to change their minds when more facts are known. That's why we are campaigning for a referendum on the final Brexit deal that the government negotiates, with an option to remain. The movement for a people's vote is growing - be part of it.

Who are we?

Another Europe Is Possible was established to campaign for a radical 'in' vote in the EU referendum. We said 'stay in Europe to change Europe', and we believe in solidarity - between people and across borders. We come from across the spectrum of the progressive left, working across party political lines to campaign for democracy, human rights, and social justice.

We want to stop Tory Brexit with a people's vote - a referendum on the terms of the Brexit deal once they have been negotiated with Europe with an option to remain in the EU if the terms are rejected.

We are now touring universities with 'Trump, Brexit and Fighting the New Far Right' - a series of events aiming to explore, understand and discuss how to tackle these challenges head-on.

Trump, Brexit and Fighting the New Far Right

A series of events on campuses across the county - to find your nearest event or learn how you can host one at your university or college see our website

Stop Trump Stop Brexit Fight the Far Right

Donald Trump's America serves as a warning to progressives the world over. Attacks on migrants, women and LGBT people, climate change denial, corporate tax breaks funded by cuts to healthcare, and white supremacists in public office - this is already the reality, and not just in the US. From France to Germany and from Hungary to Poland - across Europe, the far right is getting dangerously close to government, or is already in power. In the UK, Brexit - an establishment project spearheaded by Nigel Farage and Boris Johnson - is threatening our jobs, rights and freedoms, and it is built on a narrative of racist scapegoating. Fascist street movements, emboldened by these victories, are descending on our cities, demanding a society ruled by hate.

We cannot afford to sit and watch. Addressing these challenges will require the effort of thousands of people up and down the country, resisting racism and bigotry, and fighting for the alternative - a fairer, more equal society built for and by the many. There's no time to waste: join this movement today.

Migrants' Rights

The UK is the only country in Europe without a time limit on detention, meaning migrants can be held in detention centres for years for no other crime than their nationality. Theresa May's "hostile environment" policies are preventing migrants from accessing employment, healthcare, housing, education, banking and other basic services. And if free movement with Europe ends with Brexit, it will mean the biggest expansion of border controls in decades, and will inevitably lead to more deportations and separated families.

To crush the far right, we need to win the argument on immigration.
Get involved: join campaigns against detention, deportation resistance, campaigns for international students' rights on campus, and join us in defending freedom of movement.

Workers' Rights

Poverty pay, insecure contracts and the gig economy are on the rise, disproportionately affecting young people. What's more, if we leave the EU, the government will have the power to remove basic protections for workers – including limits on weekly working hours, guaranteed holidays, breaks and maternity pay.

Across the country, low-paid, precarious and migrant workers have been organising, fighting back and winning: from McDonald's staff to Deliveroo couriers to cleaners at universities including SOAS and LSE. Support workers' campaigns on and off campus: raise funds, go to picket lines, and if you have a job, join a trade union and organise in your workplace!

Mobilise Against Racism + Fascism

The Brexit vote has emboldened far right street movements and led to a spike in hate crime. Every time racists and fascists march through our streets, they must be met with mass grassroots resistance showing them they are not welcome. Join your local anti-fascist group and help mobilise against the growing far right.

Climate Change

Global temperatures keep breaking records, causing natural disasters and displacing communities. Meanwhile, world leaders keep failing us, prioritising the interests of big business over our lives - and Brexit will allow the government to scrap the environmental protections we have in the name of "cutting red tape."

Environmental campaigns often focus on individual consumer choices - but to win against the biggest threat facing humanity, we need much more than that: people who have the courage to take on governments and corporations and demand radical action now. Many campuses already have societies and campaigns focused on fighting climate change - get involved or set one up.
